War Summary of The Latest Events

"On the battlefield the situation is unchanged," says the German report issued Wednesday night. There may be another rush for Paris, but that which began on the Ailette on the morning of May 27th has ended. The British official summation states that "the situation in the Aisne sector may almost be said to have reached that position of stability to disturb which would require the introduction of some new factor." A free translation of this War Office patter is that the enemy cannot make further headway unless he is prepared to throw in a lot of fresh troops. Now that plenty of French guns are in position in the wooded areas that bar the progress of the enemy on both banks of the Ourcq, the full price is being exacted by Gen. Foch for every foot of ground gained. There is no profit for Germany in continuing the Aisne offensive under these conditions, and the battle is likely to die down within two or three days. But what does not mean an abandonment by Germany of the policy of attack and a return to the trench warfare of former seasons. There will be another great offensive as soon as the German chiefs can prepare for it.

On several occasions enemy attacks have been foreshadowed by means of speeches delivered in the Reichstag. In opening the proceedings of the House on Tuesday the Vice-President, Dr. Paaschei expressed the hope that a decisive blow would soon fall. The Marne, he said, would not again form a turning point, as in 1914, now that Germany had a free hand in the East. It may be taken for granted, therefore, that the enemy is already preparing to strike another blow at some point of the line where he can hope to secure an initial success by a surprise attack. Before the spring campaign began it was announced that a million and a half casualties would not be regarded as an excessive price for a decisive victory. In less than three months the enemy has incurred at least six hundred thousand casualties without arriving anywhere in particular. There are still several hundred thousand men in reserve to make good future losses, but they will not keep the German army up to strength till the end of the present campaigning season, at the present ratio of losses in action. And, most ominous fact of all, the Americans, whose participation in a European war was regarded a little over a year ago as a topic for the German "comics," are now coming into action in large numbers and receiving the highest praise for their gallantry and resourcefulness. They are precisely the same wideawake young fellows as our own Canadians, and when they learn the business of war in the school of experience will be equally formidable foes.

PROCLAMATION !

Whereas a petition has been circulated among the business men of the Town of Napanee and has been signed by nearly all of said business men, and

Whereas the prayer of the petition is that the Council do cause a proclamation to issue calling upon all business men to close their places of business at 12 o'clock noon on Wednesdays, June 19th and 26th, and all day on every Wednesday during the months of July and August, and

Whereas the purpose of said closing as set forth in said petition is not for the purpose of giving a holiday to employers and employees but is for the express purpose of freeing labor that it may be utilized to assist greater production not only in the town itself but also in the farming district contiguous to the town.

And whereas said petition has been presented to the Council and the Council has favorably considered the same and has passed a resolution calling upon the Mayor to issue his proclamation calling upon all business men to close their respective places of business as aforesaid for the purpose only of assisting in the labor of production.

[Now therefore do I, as Mayor of the Town of Napanee, proclaim that Wednesdays the 19th and 26th days of June from the hour of 12 o'clock noon and all day of every Wednesday during July and August be observed as labor days in and for the Town of Napanee.]

I do further for the purpose aforesaid call upon all business men in said town to close and keep closed their respective places of business on the days and parts of days before mentioned, and

I do further request that all said business men and employees do assist in carrying out the true intent and purpose of this proclamation.

J. E. ROBINSON,

Mayor.

On the session of other black sea ports than Batum and the massacre of Armenians in those portions of Russian Armenia occupied by the Turks under the provisions of the treaty of Brest-Litovsk have greatly embittered hostilities. From Moscow comes the news that a big battle was fought in the Kars district eight days ago, in which the Turks were defeated. The Russians are following up the retiring enemy along the road to Ardahan, and, as usual in a retreat, the Turks are killing the civilian population along the line of march.

The British operations in Mesopotamia have been suspended for a time because of the heat. There is no evidence of the presence of any great concentration in the Valleys of the Tigris and the Euphrates. The Turks, under the compulsion of their German masters, are undoubtedly putting all their energies into the campaign in Transcaucasia in the hope of taking and holding the territory through which the pipeline runs connecting the great oil fields of Baku on the Caspian, with the Black Sea. Possession of the Baku oil field would be of enormously greater value to Germany just now than a spectacular but barren victory in the Tigris Valley.

There is still no news of importance from the Italian Alpine frontier. From Swiss sources comes the information that large bodies of Austrian troops are still enroute through the Tyrol towards the battlefield, but it is evident the enemy is far from keen. Only strong German pressure keeps Austria-Hungary in the field, and the increasing disturbances in Bohemia and Slavonia—must be causing the Emperor Karl and his advisers much anxiety. The Italians are greatly heartened by their recent successes in the Tonale Range and on the Piave. They have been united by the stroke of last November, which was meant to destroy them, and will fight a good fight when the Austrians emerge from the passes.

ROBLINDALE SOUTH

On Thursday evening last a large number of friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lasher and presented their son, Herchimer, with a gold wrist watch and farewell address before his departure for Kingston to join the military ranks.

The following address was read by Mr. P. G. Huyck, and the watch was presented by Mr. G. H. Brooks:

To Mr. Herchimer Lasher:

It is with sadness that we assemble here to-night, because we feel your pleasant, genial, unselfish countenance will not beam under your parental roof as heretofore. With heartfelt strivings have we wished that this cruel war would be settled before our own boys were called to the colors to put down the Hun, but such has not been the case. God has permitted it to go on for reasons we in our finite minds cannot conceive, unless it would be to stamp out some of the sin of the world; whatever our speculations in this respect we cannot be quite sure at present because of our incomplete minds. But this we do know that a great many of our best, bravest, robust, stalwart young men are swarming to the colors at the call of our country to protect it from invaders who would gladly enter our gates and claim our heritage, murder us as occupants, and make a livelihood on our hard earnings. Although sorry to part we are glad for the motives which animate you to this noble purpose of fighting for loved ones, home and country. May the Great God, who is the defender of all who diligently seek Him, encompass you about and bring you back to us a strong, courageous, sincere christian, a model for us all.

And now as a slight token of our appreciation will you kindly accept this wrist watch, and as it cheerfully ticks may it mark many minutes before we all meet in that upper and better land where no war shall ruffle the calm of that celestial home.

Signed on behalf of the community,

VIOLET SCHERMEHORN,
ETHEL LASHER.

Herchimer, though taken by surprise, thanked them for the remembrance. The evening was brought to a close by serving of refreshments and singing, "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

THE "WHY" FOR SUPPERS AND PARTIES

"Why should suppers at parties and Lodge be cut out?"

Because these are social gatherings where EATING IS SECONDARY to entertainment. HUNGER DOES NOT ENTER. The unwanted food could be saved. "Live not to eat, but eat to live." The same rule ought to apply at Five O'clock teas and card parties.

Lodge meetings have a business feature. These parties are not all luxuries but THE "EXTRA" IN THE EATING IS NEEDLESS. If a meal has to be taken it should be simple and plain. Restaurants and cafes are not allowed to serve more than one ounce of wheaten products to custom- ers between 9.00 p.m. and 5.30 a.m. Semi-private parties AT HOME OR IN LODGE have exactly the SAME MORAL OBLIGATION to help to save food as people in these places.

The spirit of comradeship is the essence of a Lodge, Masonic or other- wise. The SPIRIT OF THE "SPORT" IS A JOY to any party. First loyal- ty of comrades is to those at the front and the best "sport" to-day plays WITH THE ALLIES IN THE BIG TEAM WORK of the Canadian people through food control.

A little thought would save a lot of wheat. The devotion of a Lodge will secure it. The pleasure of a party will be added to, if all know "THEY SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE".

Mr. Bird will play "Ned, the Detec- tive," in "The Doctor's Private Secre- tary," a part he played as leading man with the Redmond Co. over five hundred times.

GERMAN HORDE HALT

Most Hopeful Reports Since
Great Battle Began.

Bitter Struggle Continues But Te Forces Have Not Been Able Continue Progress — Allied serves Are Arriving In L Numbers and Tide of Battle Commenced to Turn.

LONDON, June 4.—"Last night report is the most hopeful since beginning of the battle; for the time since last Monday it can be that the enemy gained no ground
during the day," says Reuter's respondent with French headquarters in France.

"On his westward-facing front the direction of Paris, where at and counter-attack followed quick succession until late in afternoon, the German gains were least counter-balanced by French gains.

"In the centre the enemy has tended his front along the north of the Marne, which is still bound by the towns of Chateau Thierry which was evacuated some days and Verneuil."

Bouresches, in the vicinity
which village French troops Sunday night broke up a violent German attack, is about 2 1/2 miles west of teau Thierry, on the north side of River Marne. Troops of the German Crown Prince launched strong attacks in the direction of Meaux miles northeast of Paris, on each of the road between Chateau Thierry
and the French capital.

One column followed the left bank of the Marne, making for Compiègne and Le Ferte-sous-Jouarre.
Other column went to the north the high road, pushing in the direction of the River Ourcq. Both vances were broken by the French.

With 40 divisions of the enemy serves still unengaged it behooves Gen. Foch to employ his reserves the most cautious way, other while at grips with the enemy may find himself held up at any point. The general view in Paris inclined to be optimistic. An official commentator declares that complete stabilization is not achieved, at least the strategical balance is turning in favor of the Allies.

Day after day since the drive
gan last Monday the Germans been increasing their forces by addition of fresh men, until have now in this theatre a 750,000 troops. As the German objective becomes clearer, how the reserves of the allies are rushed up to the critical points apparently have arrived where were most needed in sufficient to turn the scale, as in brilliant attacks yesterday the French not checked the German attempt advance westward down the Aisne but recaptured the villages of Coudon and Neuilly, a little further south.

At the other end of the new front, which measured around curve is now about 75 miles there has been sharp fighting at Rheims and all the way down to Marne, but no material change position.

It is announced from Paris powerful French reserves are now position about Chateau Thierry, facing the Germans between that and Verneuil. In this district serious bridges cross the Marne, where follows a very winding course affording the defenders on the east bank excellent positions to entrench such detachments of the enemy curve is now about 75 miles to the west has been sharp fighting at Rheims and all the way down to Marne, but no material change position.

It is announced from Paris powerful French reserves are now positioned about Chateau Thierry, and the Germans between that place and Verdun. In this district numerous bridges cross the Marne, where here follows a very winding course affording the defenders, on the south bank excellent positions to enfilade such detachments of the enemy attempt to force a passage.

South of Dormans, where the efforts of the Germans to cross made, two important highways lead to the southward. The main railroad from Paris to Epernay, Chalons-sur-Marne, Bar-le-Duc, and Nancy hugs the southern bank of the river. If the Germans succeed in cutting it they will materially interfere with the transportation of the French reserves along the threatened front.

The Germans by reaching Marne advanced 30 miles from the starting point on the Ailette in 4 days, and are now within 45 miles of Paris in a straight line, 53 by railroad. In 1914 they reached Meux, near the junction of the Marne and the Ailette, which is miles nearer the capital.

Although it is believed that German Crown Prince has used all his own reserves and all those immediately available, the reserves of the German army between Rheims and Verdun can still be drawn upon as well as those of Duke Albrecht of Wurtemberg, further to the east while the extensive German concentrations still stand on the Ailette front.

Opinion here seems to be inclined to the belief that the chances of the Germans will turn suddenly to renew their blow on the west are coming less. Gen. Foch has had govern his allotment of reserves various districts by probability among them the very great chance that the Germans would begin a drive to the west on the Somme soon as his men in that quarter were withdrawn. With his possible eliminated, he will be much free act.

British Conscript Farmers.

Germans Drop Bombs on Paris

PARIS, June 4. — Deputy Daigny, who has just returned from the front, where he saw Gen. Foch declared the commander-in-chief fully observed this was only the first day of the battle, whereas eight or ten days were necessary to stop the offensive of March 21. Homme Leclerc considers the declaration conveyed clear meaning, and that the commander-in-chief is confident he will stop the enemy and mend the situation in a few days.

Meanwhile, departmental reports from naval districts along the whole Atlantic coast showed feverish activ-

along the coast armed craft are con-

Every craft has orders to fire on sight at any suspicious object.

Already they have pounded float-

search of the foe, leading to reports of battles at sea from various points.

Persistent reports that one of the two raiders reported had been sunk,

KARLSRUHE IS ATTACKED.

Over a Ton of Projectiles Dropped on German City.

LONDON, June 4.—Another air raid on Karlsruhe has been made by British air squadrons, according to the official statement on aerial operations, which reads:

"Our airplanes and balloons again carried out much successful work yesterday. During the morning our long-distance bombing machines crossed the Rhine and in spite of strong opposition from enemy aircraft dropped over a ton of bombs on the station and workshops at Karlsruhe. One machine engaged in this raid failed to return.

"Another group of our airplanes have dropped a ton of bombs on the railway triangle of Metz-Sablons with good effect and without losses. During the course of the day 31 tons of bombs were dropped on different targets behind the enemy lines.

"Twenty German machines were destroyed in air fighting and six were driven down out of control.
One other hostile machine was shot down by anti-aircraft fire. One of our machines is missing.

"During last night 16 tons of bombs were dropped by us on targets in enemy territory. Six tons were dropped on the Bruges docks and on the Zeebrugge-Bruges Canal.
In addition four tons were dropped on railway junctions and the stations
at Metz-Sablons, Karthaus and Thionville. All our night-bombing machines returned.

"One German light bombing airplane was brought down in flames behind our lines."

German "Man Trap."

PARIS, June 4.—The latest German barbarity consists of a man-trap similar to a bear trap, discovered in No Man's Land by Corpl. Leonardo Manser and Sergt. Victor L. Vaupel, United States Engineers.

The contrivance, which is chained to stakes in the ground, is three feet long and his jaws 18 inches wide with teeth two inches long. It is designed to give the victim great pain and make him call for help. This attracts his comrades, who become targets for a German machine-gun fusillade, which results in the annihilation of the entire party.

The trap is in the Paris Y.M.C.A., where it has been examined by a number of Americans, who were astonished at the horror of the device.
It will be shipped to America as a trophy.

Over $4,000,000 has been contributed by the I.O.D.E. throughout Canada for war work since August, 1914.

Greeks Repulse Bulgars.

PARIS, June 3.—Referring to operations in the eastern theatre the War Office report said:

"A counter-attack by the Bulgarians against our new positions at Srka-di-Legen was repulsed by our barrage fire. The total number of troops taken during our successful attack on the enemy positions has now reached 1,712. Serbian detachments which penetrated the enemy's trenches have now cleared them out."

LITTLE SAINT PIERRE

THE TINY FRENCH COLONY IN NORTH AMERICA.

Some People In Newfoundland Would Like to Annex the Island After the War, But the Frenchmen Are Loyal to Their Motherland — It Has Always Been Famous as Centre of Smuggling.

SHALL Saint Pierre, the last relic in the Northern Atlantic of the once great empire in North America held by France, but annexed to Newfoundland, and again become British territory? That is the question which is troubling the small French colony.

Where is Saint Pierre colony? Haul down your old geography and look at the mouth of Fortune Bay: ten miles south of Newfoundland an equidistant from Capes Race and Ray, and you will see the tiny French islands of Saint Pierre, Miquelon and Langdale.

Miquelon and Langdale — more commonly called Langley — have an area of 45,542 acres, and are connected by a sandbar. Previous to 1783 they were separate islands, divided by a navigable channel. The island of Saint Pierre — the only one of importance — has an area of 6,422 acres. At its southern extremity is the city of St. Pierre, with a population of more than five thousand inhabitants. During the codfishing season this is increased by fully ten thousand. The islands were ceded to Britain, with Newfoundland, in 1713 but on the British conquest of Canada they were assigned to France as a fishery depot. Taken by the British in 1778; restored to France in 1783; depopulated by the British in 1793; recovered by France in 1802; lost again in 1803, they have remained an undisputed French possession since 1816. The codfishing industry has been prosecuted in these waters for more than four hundred years.

This French colony on this tiny archipelago is a bit of Brittany in America. It is made up of Frenchmen and their descendants from Brittany, from Normandy, and from the Basque country. Practically all of the inhabitants of the little town of St. Pierre are of French blood. They are proud that the French tricolor flies from the flagstaff of "the Government House" in that town.

Canada's Registration

Its Purpose and Application

CANADA faces the gravest crisis in her history. Four years of war have taken from the Dominion a heavy toll in talent and labor, yet despite the shortage of manpower, our Allies still depend on Canada to maintain her own fighting forces at full strength and to increase her exports of food and war materials, so vital to them, and to the successful prosecution of the war.

Every ounce by which Canada can increase her food production and every ounce Canada can save in her food consumption is needed for export to the Allies.

Should the war continue for another year, food cards and a rationing system may have to be instituted. It is the duty of Canada to be prepared for whatever situation circumstances may force upon her.

It is quite probable that before the war is won our Government may have to place restrictions upon the occupations in which men and women may engage. In such an event the Government wishes to be in a position to render all possible assistance in keeping our population usefully and profitably employed.

Registration Day, June 22nd

These conditions point to the necessity of Canada knowing the exact capabilities of her men and women at home.

All persons residing in Canada, male or female, British or alien of 16 years and over, will be required to register on June 22nd and truthfully answer the questions set forth upon the registration card.

It is not the Government's intention to conscript labour in any form, but to assist in directing it wisely, so that every available unit of human energy may be utilized to the best advantage.

The information procured through registration will be used — as an aid to the Military Authorities in procuring the men necessary to maintain "Canada's First Line of Defence" — to mobilize all units of available labor in the Dominion and direct them from less essential to more essential occupations — to establish and intelligently administer a system of food rationing should that become necessary.

Miquelon and Langdale — more commonly called Langley — have an area of 45,542 acres, and are connected by a sandbar. Previous to 1783 they were separate islands, divided by a navigable channel. The land of Saint Pierre—the only one of importance—has an area of 6,420 acres. At its southern extremity is the city of St. Pierre, with a population of more than five thousand inhabitants. THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTHLINE, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

the capital of the colony.

Newfoundland newspapers have started a project to have this colony ceded to Britain after the war. Unofficial efforts have been made to sound American public opinion on the matter, but without visible result. Appeals were sent to France by the islanders not to cast off these loyal French colonists, and assurances were received that no such step would be sanctioned. All the Chambers of Commerce and all the deputies of the Maritime Provinces in France have declared they will stand by the little colony. Much uneasiness is felt. Economic considerations it is feared, may cut a figure in official considerations after the war, for until the war brought renewed prosperity to the fisheries of these islands, the colony's chief industry has steadily declined since Newfoundland cut off its bait privileges, and the Home Government has been forced to grant bounties to keep the colony alive.

Two million dollars' worth of cod used to be the value of the annual catch handled at St. Pierre, and the war may bring the total up to that figure again. The good harbor is a convenient base for fishing fleets on the Grand Banks.

In this little French town one can find French wines, and liquors, French tobacco and cigars, French perfumery and other French articles. There are no hotels, but many boarding houses with French cooking and a friendly greeting. St. Pierre has had a French chapel since 1689, and now has a half dozen. This modest seaport is on a treeless rock four miles long and six hundred feet above the level of the Atlantic, and is marked by jagged cliffs and a ragged sea line.

In this French colony one can see men and women wearing the old costumes of the peasants back in Brit-

Sugar-Making In Ontario.

TO THE WOMEN'S SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE NAPANEE GREATER PRODUCTION COMMITTEE AFFILIATED WITH THE "ONTARIO ORGANIZATION OF RESOURCES COMMITTEE."

The above heading includes every woman in Napanee because it is understood that every man and woman in Napanee is vitally interested in this Greater Production Campaign.

At the last meeting of the Executive of this Committee it was thought probable that the services of the women could be enlisted in an active canvas to induce parties to take up vacant land work, but the Men's Committee (M. P. Graham, chairman) who had charge of securing lots have had more applications for land than they could fill. The response has been most gratifying, and this year the land actually under cultivation in Napanee has probably been increased by at least 100 acres over any previous year. We are sorry to learn that some good lots are not being put under cultivation, the owners having promised faithfully to the Town Committee that they would till them, but have failed to do so. No doubt their conscience will bother them all through the year.

Our work as a Women's Subcommittee will take the shape of formulating plans to urge upon each and every family the great necessity of faithfully looking after their crops while growing, and canning every bit of surplus garden stuff they may have over and above their immediate wants. Amateur gardeners must not think for a moment that when once the crop has started to grow their work is over till harvest. It is a constant fight to defeat the bug and weed pests, and those of us who cannot go over seas to fight should be delighted to put up this other fight, that we may be able even only to a small extent, to help grow and save food that our soldier boys may have more.

In view of the serious situation on the farm, due to the new conscription measure, it will be necessary to "dig up" the last available man for service in haying and harvesting this summer.

Perhaps definite announcements will be made regarding this after our National Registration takes place on June 22nd.

Let us each and everyone do our part to show the Hun that Canadians are in the fight to a finish here in Canada as well as at the front.

FOR YOUR CORNS

OFF WITH FINGER!

Tells how to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone, which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn or callus the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off with the fingers.

Freezone dries the moment it is applied, and simply shrivels the corn or callus without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but will positively rid one's feet of every hard, soft corn or hardened callus. If your druggist hasn't any freezone he can get it at any wholesale drug house for you.

THE HABITANT COUNTRY.

It Is Picturesque and Recalls the Old World.

New France! The change from the Maritime Provinces or Ontario comes suddenly. In a moment, as were, one is surrounded by French Canada, by French faces, French farms, French songs and language. In all America, there is no more picturesque and old-world region than the white man than this Habitant Country beloved of the poet, Drummond, and occupied by peasants who form the only important offshoot of the French people to be found. This section has an isolated, quaint, most medieval civilization, in which gay French chansons echoing from peasant cottages, home-fashioned huts and furniture, lofty wayside "calvaries," tumble-down little Norman houses with sloping roofs and dormer windows, like those of France 300 years ago, scarlet sashes, a bright, knitted hoods, high, two-wheeled carts or caleches, and to running sleighs or burleaux, speak eloquently of a day long past. So, to speak the leisurely, old-world courtesy and the simple gaiety and contentment of light-hearted "Pieds" and his people, amid whom hospitality reigns supreme and smiles universal.

The villages are long and straggling. They often begin with a saint and end with another, though the parishes, having caught up with each other, had decided to make common cause. Pass out of the long, winding funnel of the irregular main street, past the open-air ovens, where peasant women daub bread, with a crowd of children tugging at their skirts, pass the line of lumber mills, and a high cliff slope, crowned by a lordly monastic establishment, invariably comes in view. Noble and majestic in its aloofness, it casts its long shadow across some hut into which a habitant and his numerous family have burrowed. Enter this hut, and you will doubtless find that the main room is doing service as parlor, dining-room and kitchen. In the corner, a clunk staircase leads up to a loft that is shakedown for members of the family and a storehouse for lumber. There, in a flash, one has caught something of the pathos of the Habitant Country, of the out-at-elbow homes, which straggle along until they reach the door of an impressive twin-spired church. Cow Ate Dynamite.

A more than usually interesting case came before the County Court at Grand Forks when a citizen sued the owners of a quarry for payment for a cow which he claimed had died from eating dynamite that had been left lying around loose by the operators of the quarry.

A small sailboat of Japan was mast near the stern, and the sailor skulls from the side of the boat.

W. J. NORMILE.

Captain Joseph E. Bernier, Arctic explorer, who commanded the Canadian steamship Percesien, which foundered in the Atlantic in February, has returned from England after an adventurous voyage. He now is completing arrangements for a trip to the polar regions on board his ship the Guide from Quebec.

The Arctic navigator is going to Ottawa, where he will confer with the Marine Minister. His interview may have a bearing on Stefansson now in the Arctic. Captain Bernier may take up some important work of exploration in the Arctic which will supplement the efforts of Stefansson. This, however, will depend upon the result of his conference with the Government officials in Ottawa.

Captain Bernier seeks to leave about July 1 on board the Guide which is now being outfitted for a polar voyage, and he will take supplies and provisions enough to last for two years. It is his intention to establish caches in the Arctic for Roald Amundsen, the famous explorer, who will sail for the North Pole from Norway about June 1.

The members of Stefansson's expedition owe their lives to Captain Bernier, who established a cache at Winter Harbor. When he arrived in Canada Captain Bernier told of the loss of the Percesien and of his rescue from the sinking ship 800 miles off the coast of Ireland.

The Percesien was one of a convoy of eighteen vessels going from this side of the Atlantic to England.

For four days Captain Bernier and the seamen of the Percesien battled with high seas and snow squalls. The heavy seas washed the cabin away and destroyed two lifeboats. Then the steering gear became unmanageable and the pumps in the engine-room were choked with coal. All hands were ordered to the pumps to keep the vessel afloat.

The water made steady inroads as the gale increased and, finally, the fires were extinguished and the electric lights put out.

Distress signals were hoisted and were observed by one of the ships in the convoy—the Lord Arne, of Belfast—the officers on that ship taking the signals at first for a submarine. At last their signals were recognized and the mate and seamen of the Lord Arne went to the rescue of Captain Bernier.

Shortage of Jute.

Owing to the rather critical conditions prevailing in the jute industries in Scotland the Dundee jute spinners and manufacturers are largely in favor of resorting to a stoppage of a certain proportion of machinery in their works. The Government has made known its desire for a reduction of 10 per cent. on the 1916 consumption of raw jute, and at a recent meeting of the spinners and discreet, fair judgment, unusually agreed that the reduction should be effected by a curtailment of machinery rather than by running on short time.

In the corner, a clumsy staircase leads up to a loft that is a shakedown for members of the family and a storehouse for lumber. There, in a flash, one has caught something of the pathos of the Habitant Country, of the out-at-elbow homes, which straggle along until they reach the door of an impressive twin-spired church. It is the old France, the France before the revolution.

All along the shores of the St. Lawrence, once the only highway lies the true heart of the Habitant Country, the spot where settled lineal descendants of those who, centuries before, penetrated the "pay d'en haut" with a sublime courage and inspiration, to lift the veil from the unknown West. Here are the historic farms, measuring their precious river frontage by feet and their depth by miles, their houses ranged, in colonial days, in rows that their occupants might the better fend off the attacks of the American Indian.

"Jean Courteau" clings with a almost desperate love to the picturesque riparian villages of the St. Lawrence, stretching all the way from the "gates" of the Habitant Country at Riviere du Loup, beyond the core of Drummond's adopted Habitant world at Trois Rivières to that outer western edge at Bord Plouffe, which hugs the banks of the beautiful Riviere des Prairies. Here is the haunt of the gladiators of the saw log who, from the square lumber raft, sing their odd ditties, "Trois beaux canards," or "Par derrier chez ma tante."

"Bord a Plouffe is on de reever, Bord a Plouffe is on de shore, An' de family of Plouffe dere a aroun'."

It was Voltaire who, at the fall of Quebec, contemptuously remarked that England and France were fighting for a few acres of snow. But the Habitant knows better. Happy an contented, his country, for him, is the most precious possession in the world, and many a citizen in less happy lands might envy the spirit which sings:

"But I tole you—dat's true—I don go on de city, If you geev de fine house an' beat coup d'argent—I rader be stay me, an' spen' de la day me On farm by de rapide dat's ca Cheval Blanc."

Mrs. Ralph Smith Introduces Bill

One plank in the platform upon which Mrs. Ralph Smith appealed the Vancouver electorate in January last was nailed into position when Hon. J. W. DeB. Farris, Attorney General for British Columbia, introduced as a Government measure, the Vancouver lady member's bill, "An Act to Provide for a Minimum Wage for Women." First reading was accorded the bill and its further pilage through the House will be left to Mrs. Smith.

A Voiceless Mule.

The bray of the army mule is no longer heard in France. French veterinarians are extracting the bray and after that is done the nearest mule can come to making a noise to wheeze. A slight surgical operation on the nose removes the hee-haw which sounded like an imitation Hun shells. The brayless mule is less dangerous, for it cannot warn the enemy of its nearness, but removes the hee-haw takes all the roman out of a mule.

The TRAIL BLAZER

to greater Motor Car Value

From the standpoint of dollar for dollar value there's not a car made which offers more for your money than the famous Chevrolet Four-Ninety A.

Before the Chevrolet was made in Canada, good cars were all high in price.

But our mammoth production and manufacturing efficiency enables us to sell the Chevrolet Four-Ninety A at a price much lower than its value when compared with other makes of cars.

With the surplus power developed by the famous valve-in-head motor the owner of a Four-Ninety A invariably is the "trail blazer."

Standard equipment includes speedometer, electric starting and lighting, compass, oil indicator light equipment, one man top, demountable tires, non-skid tires on rear wheels and many features usually looked for in cars much higher in price.

NOTED LECTURER ON TEMPERANCE ENDORSES TANLAC

Mrs. Martha Stone Was For Years Associated With Founder of W.C.T.U.

One of the features that distinguish es Tanlac from all other proprietary medicines is the large number of prominent people who everywhere are giving it their unqualified endorsement. Among the statements recently received at the Tanlac office is one in particular that is sure to arouse widespread interest throughout the country, having been made by Mrs. Martha R. Stone, of 7225
Third Ave., North West, Seattle, Wash., noted temperance lecturer who for many years was associated with the late Frances E. Willard, founder of the W.C.T.U. In relating her experience with Tanlac Mrs. Stone said:
"I think it is the duty of everyone who has been relieved as I have to do what they can to help others;
therefore it gives me much pleasure to tell of the benefits I have derived from the use of Tanlac.

"I was a great sufferer for many years with nervous trouble, which became so bad that I had to take to my bed, where I lay for six weeks entirely helpless and unable to move.
The least little noise would upset me and I was not allowed to see anyone for fear it would excite me, and I was told that my entire nervous system had suffered a collapse. You see,
I had passed through the great San Francisco fire in which I lost everything I possessed, and the experience was a severe shock to my already overwrought nerves. When at last I was able to get out of bed I would have such awful dizzy spells that thing in my room seemed to spin around as though I was in the center of a whirlpool. My stomach was so weak and my appetite so poor that I hardly ate a thing, and what little I forced down soured and formed gas that pressed up into my throat and in my chest and made me so hoarse that it was an effort for me to speak.
I also suffered much pain in the lower part of my body from this same gas pressure. My liver, too, was all out of order and my kidneys gave me no end of trouble.

"When my son-in-law saw that the medicines I was taking were doing me no good, he induced me to try Tanlac, as he said it had done him so much good he believed it would help me too. To oblige him I got me a bottle and the first few doses soon convinced me that it was just what I needed, and my first bottle put me right on my feet. I am now on my second bottle and am in splendid shape, for my nerves are practically in a normal state for the first time in all these years, which I consider a remarkable thing. I have a fine appetite and can eat most anything
I want without suffering any unpleasantness afterwards. Tanlac is fast helping me to overcome my troubles, and I feel that I am getting on just fine ever since I began taking it."

"How much cider did you make this year?" inquired Puttey of his neighbor, Savall.
"Fifteen bar'ls," was the answer. Farmer Puttey took another sip.
"It's a pity," he said, "that you haven't another apple. You might have made another bar'l."

Dean Stanley.

It must, I think, have been when he was still at Canterbury, investigat- ing, almost with the zest and passion of the explorer of Troy or Mycenae, what bones lie hid and where, under the cathedral floor, what sands— "fallen from the ruined sides of Kings"—that this passion of deaths and dates was upon him. I can see myself as a child of seven or eight, standing outside the drawing-room door at Fox How, bracing myself in a mixture of delight and fear, as to what "Doctor Stanley" might ask me when the door was opened; then the opening, and the sudden sharp turn of the slight figure, writing letters at the middle table, at the sight of "little Mary" and the expected thun- derbolt:

"Where did Henry the Fourth die?"

Confusion—and blank ignorance! But memory leaps forward to a day four or five years later, when my father and I invaded the little Dean in his study at Westminster. I remember well the dark high room, and the Dean standing at his read- ing desk. He looks round — sees "Tom," and the child with him. His charming face breaks into a broad smile; he remembers instantly, though it is some years since he and "little Mary" met. He holds out both hands to the little girl—

"Come and see the place where Henry the Fourth died!"

And off we ran together to the Jerusalem Chambers. — Mrs. Hum- phrey Ward in Harper's Magazine.

FIGHTING THE U-BOATS.

British Hear Plain Facts About Shipbuilding.

The sensation of the hour in Great Britain has been the blunt statement by Mr. Barnes, Minister of Labor, as to the falling off in shipbuilding during the first two months of the present year. It came as a shock both to Parliament and the public after the encouragement they have had to believe we had got a real spring forward in boat construction to learn that the output in January and February was 50 per cent. below expectation. Not to leave any room for cheerfulness, Mr. Barnes carefully added the extraneous information that "America was also failing."

Truth has many facets, and after the revulsion of this gloomy picture had been properly felt, Mr. Bonar Law offered a moderate corrective—on the following day. It seems that up to the end of 1917 the British were doing well, and Sir Eric Geddes was justified in his remark about the upward curve, though that general phrase got an exaggerated importance from our optimism. It has to be remembered also that the British have made a big diversion of workers for repairing services, and this increased restoration of craft to the mercantile marine has real benefit. Further, even on Mr. Barnes' own showing, the men are now pulling reasonably well. Indeed, he reckons that labor conditions at present are fairly satisfactory. The figures he gave referred to the ships being turned out, not to the operations now taking place. The British are apparently suffering from disturbance in the past rather than in the present. But the deficiency is matter of fact, and the call to fresh energy is real. Mr. Barnes did not speak solely on his own initiative. The Government had come to the conclusion it was best to tell the public that the situation was serious, and make direct appeal in these circumstances to the shipbuilders. Since then glowing cables from the United States convey that America's inability to work up to anticipations is fully appreciated there. The error of estimates appears to have been from too sanguine a view having been taken of the business of gearing up preparations. You cannot make multitudes of shipbuilders to move like regiments in a week or a month. Moreover, the economic manipulation of the mercantile marine by the Shipping Controller (Sir Joseph Maclay) has been so adroitly performed that, although the British are 20 per cent. down in shipping, decline in imports is only 2 per cent.

In Herschel Island.

In Herschel Island, where the sun shines continuously for eight weeks in summer, the Eskimos had a suidance, not always clothed in the garments of propriety. They had an idea that when the sun came back its movements were directed by an invisible power, but they had no tangible conception of a God. They had no belief in a future life, either of reward or punishment. To-day they are religious, truthful, kind to their children and to the aged. They are ambitious to learn, they are practical, extremely industrious, sanitary in their habits, well clothed and well housed. Insanity is unknown, but tuberculosis is quite common.

They whale in summer and trap in winter. They are clever in trading, good workers on land, water and ice, and take excellent care of their household effects. Tools broken are neatly repaired. When at Herschel Island or Fort McPherson they eat the white man's food with great relish. In summer they eat their fish frozen. They like food cooked, but it is a matter of indifference to them. They will barter for the white man's food, eat a hearty meal of it, and then go out and eat blubber and raw fish as dessert. The contents of a deer's stomach they consider a great delicacy.

The Eskimos have no fear of death; if told that death is approaching they will respond with a complacent smile. They are even more stoical than the Mongolian. Trouble does not affect them at all. They are a very happy people. Their natures are childlike, and they do not continue in the same frame of mind

GREATER PRODUCTIONS.

Dominion Will Give $2800,000 to Aid the Provinces.

The acreage in Western Canada this year will be the largest ever cultivated, and every province in the Dominion is planning to greatly increase the production of food, according to official reports to the Government. The Prime Minister recently gave Parliament an idea of what has already been accomplished with a view to providing foodstuffs for the allies. He said the services of Dr. J. W. Robertson had been secured to represent the Food Board in the five eastern provinces. He had been in consultation with the Provincial Departments of Agriculture. Hon. Charles Dunning had personally taken charge of the work in the western provinces. The work of these gentlemen might be summarized as follows:

Ontario aims to secure organization, down to county and municipal committees, particularly to assist in labor supplies and distribution, and to bring home directly to the individual farmer the need of the greatest possible effort. Quebec aims to secure similar organization, and produce enough wheat to feed herself, and to greatly increase meat animals. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have the same objective; also, in each of these provinces the effort will be to produce enough coarse grains to meet their own requirements for animal feed.

Alberta is divided into sixteen districts and efforts are being made to insure supplies of seed, to find out what help is necessary, to secure tenants for unoccupied land, to arrange definitely with farmers for the breaking of new areas of their holdings for the 1919 crop. A Provincial Labor Bureau had been established, and the work is being assisted generally by public meetings. In Saskatchewan more than two hundred meetings have been arranged, and steps have been taken to secure all available labor from towns and cities for the farms. Manitoba's plans are practically the same as those of Saskatchewan. British Columbia sends no report yet, except in a general way, but everyone is alive to the need, and putting forth as great an effort as possible.

The reports stated that the acreage in Western Canada this year would be the largest ever planted, and as much land as possible is to be broken during the present year.

Sir Robert announced that, with the approval of the Cabinet Council, financial assistance had been promised to the various provinces as follows: Ontario, $60,000; Quebec, $60,000; Nova Scotia, $30,000; New Brunswick, $25,000; Prince Edward Island, $5,000; Manitoba, $25,000; British Columbia, $15,000; Saskatchewan, $35,000, and Alberta, $25,000.

DEFENDS THE WORKER

Col. Repington Subjected to Telling Criticism.

Victor F. James, of Small Birmingham, a British munition worker, writes the New York an indignant reply to assertion viciously made in the same journal. Col. Repington, the war critic, had claimed that many men should be in khaki were engaged in munitions-making, and that was not doing its full "bit." I advocated a "real comb-out of fat and munitions works."

James writes a gripping and interesting letter. He denounces Repington's assertions as "mischievous" and says he writes to express indignation it has caused among fellow-workers. The story of the service and sacrifice of British workmen is one worth place in the annals of war at present. He says:

"The statement that the men are deliberately limiting the of munitions is really wicked are not without our labor but during the war there has a ready disposition on both sides to settle these quickly for the sake of those in the trenches. At my most of the departments have had twelve hours daily for over years with real enthusiasm, and a grumble at Sunday work, and we take it into consideration many of these men have been to a more or less time-free at life in small businesses of the also that many are over fifty of age, their behaviour is creditable."

Observing that he is forbidden information as to the number of men employed, Mr. James says: "But you can take it from the percentage of really fit bodied fighting men not in the very small." And he tells son of the work being done by men and patriotic women. A to Repington's caustic reference "the comparatively small number of women whom you see in munitions this British workman rightly warn. "One cannot," he says down any street in any town seeing legless and armless women in mourning. Many here do not care to advertise losses and be perpetually reminded of them by sympathizers, their mourning is not conspicuous. Mr. James scores when he says: Col. Repington that "one make false conclusions from statistics taken in a dinner-hour in the west end of London, to idle theories and rumors from clubrooms. Visit the inland cities and realize how

The letter reflects courage, cheerfulness and a determination to stay with the fighting while there is any fighting to do and he is capable of helping. He was recently wounded, and as a coincidence it may be mentioned that he was found lying in No Man's Land by W. B. Turner, a former member of the Northwest Mounted Police, who served for a long time in the district where the Blood Indian reserve is located. Mountain Horse has lost one brother in the war, and another is with him in France. His filial letter follows:

"My Dear Father,—I received your letter from France. My brother sent it to me. I was very glad to hear from you. I am very glad to tell you that I am very well. I was 14 days away from here shooting. I just got back. I am going to France again in a few days. Don't worry about me. We have all got to die some day, but I might pull through all right again; then I am going home to Canada, not before. When I got hit first I was four days lying out in No Man's Land. I was hit in the leg but I am all right now. I got about fifteen Germans with my rifle, and I think I did not do so bad. I do not want to go home just yet. I have been treated very good since coming back to England, where I was in the hospital. I got the best of everything. Will say good-bye, hoping to hear from you again."

Canadian Shipbuilding.

Details of the Canadian Government's plan for assisting in meeting the need of the allies for merchant ships were given by Sir Robert Borden in the course of a speech in the House of Commons. Already much has been done in the Dominion by the Imperial Munitions Board. Orders have been placed by the Imperial Munitions Board for 43 steel ships, with an aggregate tonnage of 211,300 tons, and 46 wooden vessels, with a total tonnage of 128,400 tons. The total value of these vessels is $64,500,000; twelve shipyards are now working on orders from the Imperial Munitions Board and their capacity is being brought up to approximately 250,000 tons a year.

Berths vacated by the completion of ships ordered by the Munitions Board will be utilized at once by the Dominion Government. Four cargo steamers with a total tonnage of 23,500 tons are to be completed and placed in commission this year. Next year, however, 50 steel ships are to be constructed. For the present year the Government has authorized by order-in-Council an expenditure of $25,000,000 on shipbuilding. During his speech the Prime Minister expressed his thanks to the United States Government for its action in providing that the Canadian Government might obtain in that country 80,000 tons of ship plates and angles to meet shipbuilding requirements for this year. These materials are to be supplied at the same prices at which they are supplied to the United States Government. The Prime Minister also told of the efforts being made by the Government to bring about the establishment of a mill for the rolling of steel ship plates and angles in Canada in order to supply requirements in 1919 and in succeeding years.

THE COST OF MUTTON PRODUCTION.

(Experimental Farms Note.)

The scarcity of wool and meat given a new impetus to the breeding industry in Canada and it becomes again firmly established as a common farm industry and benefits coming from it are fully cognized, the writer feels confident that it will not again go into decline.

This class of stock, while enjoyed to the full the benefit of the increased high prices of the products produced, is probably the one which been affected the least by the increased cost of production, common to products from other classes of stock. This is due to the fact that the consumed consists largely of 1 grown roughages and grains eliminating, to a large extent, purchase of high priced concentrates. It is also due, in part, to the fact that very little labor is required to handle a flock so that the increased price of labour has not the same effect.

To arrive at the cost of mutton production many factories must be taken into consideration. It may safely be considered that the value of the manure produced by the ewes, weeds destroyed, fully offsets the labour expended. From the records of the breeding and feeding work at Central Experimental Farm, the main factors in the cost of production of year old mutton may be tabulated as follows:—

Cost of feed in maintaining ewe from weaning of one lamb to weaning of next.....
Interest on value of ewe ($3.00 at 6 per cent.).....
Service charges and maintenance of ram.....
Cost of feeding lamb from weaning till finishing at one year old.....
Wool from ewe (7 pounds at 60c. per lb.).....
Cost of 120 pounds mutton.....

THE COST OF MUTTON PRODUCTION.

The scarcity of wool and meat has given a new impetus to the sheep breeding industry in Canada and once becomes again firmly established as a common farm industry and the profits coming from it are fully recognized, the writer feels confident that it will not again go into decline.

This class of stock, while enjoying the full benefit of the increased high prices of the products produced, is probably the one which has been affected the least by increased cost of production, common to the products from other classes of stock. This is due to the fact that the feed assumed consists largely of home grown roughages and grains thus minimizing, to a large extent, the expense of high priced concentrates. This is also due, in part, to the fact that very little labor is required to raise a flock so that the increased cost of labour has not the same effect.

To arrive at the cost of mutton production many factors must be taken into consideration. It may be easily considered that the value accruing from the manure produced and the feed destroyed fully offsets the cost expended. From the records of the breeding and feeding work at the Central Experimental Farm, the remaining factors in the cost of production of year old mutton may be estimated as follows:—

Cost of feed in maintaining ewe from weaning of one lamb to weaning of next.....	$5 00
Interest on value of ewe ($3.00 at 6 per cent.).....	1 80
Wife charges and maintenance of ram.....	35
Cost of feeding lamb from weaning till finishing at one year old.....	6 72
Wool from ewe (7 pounds at 13¢ per lb.).....	91 87
Cost of 120 pounds mutton.....	9 67

Value of 100 pounds mutton Spring 1918.....	17 75
Cost of 100 pounds mutton.....	8 06
Profit per 100 pounds.....	9 69

This is a profit of $11.63 per lamb if but one lamb is raised per ewe. The above figures are based on an increase of one lamb per ewe. Where two lambs were raised practically the same results in weight may be expected at the end of the year. In such a case the first three items in the cost would be split between the two thus reducing the cost to $5.09 per hundredweight and increasing the profit to $12.66 per hundredweight.

The foregoing estimates are exclusive of overhead charges or depreciation but these items may well be overlooked as they are almost negligible in sheep raising owing to the fact that so little is required in building on equipment. Moreover, the estimates are conservative, and though they show a return of at least 38.8 per cent. on the investment of $30.00 per ewe, the same may be looked for under eastern conditions while under Western conditions even greater dividends may be realized.

It lacked a week of Christmas. That day three of Benton's men had gone in the Chickamin to Roaring Springs for supplies. They had returned in mid-afternoon, and Stella guessed by the new note of hilarity in the bunkhouse that part of the supplies had been liquid. This had happened more than once since the big snow closed in. She remembered Charlie's fury at the logger who started Matt the cook on his spree, and she wondered at this relaxation, but it was not in her province, and she made no comment.

Jack Fyfe stayed to supper that evening. Neither he nor Charlie came back to Benton's quarters when the meal was finished. While she stacked up the dishes Katy John observed:

"Goodness sakes, Miss Benton, them fellers was fresh at supper. They was half drunk, some of them. I bet they'll be half a dozen fights before mornin'."

Later there rose a brief clamor. In the dead silence that followed she heard a thud and the clinking smash of breaking glass, a panted oath, sounds of struggle.

Stella slipped on a pair of her brother's gum boots and an overcoat and ran out on the path beaten from their cabin to the shore. It led past the bunk-

6 in the morning. She shivered as she dressed. Katy John was blissfully devoid of any responsibility, for seldom did Katy rise first to light the kitchen fire. Yet Stella resented less each day's bleak beginning than she did the enforced necessity of the situation. The fact that she was enduring these things practically under compulsion was what galled.

A cutting wind struck her icily as she crossed the few steps of open between cabin and kitchen. Above no cloud floated, no harbinger of melting rain. The cold stars twinkled over snow blurred forest, struck tiny gleams from stumps that were now white capped pillars. A night swell from the outside waters beat its melancholy dirge on the frozen beach. And, as she always did at that hushed hour before dawn, she experienced a physical shrinking from those grim solitudes in which there was nothing warm and human and kindly, nothing but vastness of space upon which silence lay like a smothering blanket, in which she, the human atom, was utterly negligible, a protesting mote in the inexorable wilderness.

A light burned in the kitchen. She thanked her stars that this bitter cold morning she would not have to build a fire with freezing fingers while her one object in life, and he'll use everything and everybody in sight to attain that object. He means to succeed, and he will. You're purely incidental. But he has that perverted, middle class family pride that will make him prevent you from getting out and trying your own wings. Nature never intended a woman like you to be a celibate, any more than I was so intended. And sooner or late you'll marry somebody if only to hop out of the fire into the frying pan."

"I hate you," she flashed passionately, "when you talk like that."

"No, you don't," he returned quietly. "You hate what I say because it's the truth, and it's humiliating to be helpless. You think I don't sabe? But I'm putting a weapon into your hand. Let's put it differently; leave out the sentiment for a minute. We'll say that I want a housekeeper, preferably an ornamental one, because I like beautiful things. You want to get away from this drudgery. That's what it is, simple drudgery. You crave lots of things you can't get by yourself, but that you could help me get for you. There's things lacking in your life, and so are there in mine. Why shouldn't we go partners? You think about it."

"I don't need to," she answered coolly. "It wouldn't work. You don't appear to have any idea what it means for a woman to give herself up body and soul to a man she doesn't care for. For me it would be plain selling myself. I haven't the least affection for you. I might even detest you."

"You wouldn't," he said positively.

"What makes you so sure of that?" she demanded.

"It would sound conceited if I told you why," he drawled. "Listen. We're not gods and goddesses, we human beings. We're not, after all, in our real impulses, so much different from the age when a man took his club and went after a female that looked good to him. They mated and raised their young and very likely faced on an average fewer problems than arise in modern marriages supposedly ordained in heaven. You'd have the one big problem solved—the lack of means to live decently, which wrecks more homes than anything else, far more than lack of love. Affection doesn't thrive on poverty. What is love?"

His voice took on a challenging note.

"I don't know," she answered absently, turning over strips of bacon with the long handled fork.

"There you are," he said. "I don't know, either. We'd start even, then, for the sake of argument. No, I guess we wouldn't, either, because you're the only woman I've run across so far with whom I could calmly contemplate spending the rest of my life in close contact. That's a fact. To me it's a highly important fact. You don't happen to have any such feeling about me, eh?"

"No. I hadn't even thought of you in that way," Stella answered truthfully.

"You want to think about me," he said calmly. "You want to think about me from every possible angle, because I'm going to come back and ask you this same question every once in awhile so long as you're in reach and doing this dirty work for a thankless boss. You want to think of me as a possible refuge from a lot of disagreeable things. I'd like to have you to chum with, and I'd like to have some incentive to put a big white bungalow on that old foundation for us two," he smiled. "I'll never do it for myself alone. Go on. Take a gambling chance and marry me, Stella. Say yes, and say it now."

"Fruit-a-tives" is certainly a wonder. For a year, I suffered with Rheumatism; being forced to stay in bed for five months. I tried all kinds of medicine but without getting better, and thought I would never be able to walk again.

"One day while lying in bed, I read about 'Fruit-a-tives' the great fur medicine; and it seemed just what needed, so I decided to try it.

The first box helped me, and I took the tablets regularly until every trace of the Rheumatism left me.

I have every confidence in 'Fruit-a-tives' and strongly recommend them to every sufferer from Rheumatism."

want of life, anyway? She had to admit that she could not say fully, explicitly what she wanted. When left out her material wants there was nothing but a nebulous craving for what? Love, she assumed. And she could not define love, except as so incomprehensible transport of emotion which irresistibly drew a man and woman together, a divine fire kind in two hearts. It was not a thing she could vouch for by personal experience. It might never touch and warm that divine fire. Instinct did not then warn her that some time it would wrap her like a flame. But in meantime life had her in midstream its remorseless, drab current, sweep her along. A foothold offered. Half loaf, a single slice of bread even, better than none.

Jack Fyfe did not happen in again for nearly two weeks and then only pay a brief call, but he stole an opportunity, when Katy John was not looking, to whisper in Stella's ear:

"Have you been thinking about this bungalow of ours?"

house, and on that side opened two uncurtained windows, yellow squares that struck gleaming on the snow. The panes of one were broken now, sharp fragments standing like saw teeth in the wooden sash.

She stole warily near and looked in. Two men were being held apart, one by three of his fellows, the other by Jack Fyfe alone. Fyfe grinned mildly, talking to the men in a quiet, pacific tone.

"Now you know that was nothing to scrap about," she heard him say. "You're both full of fighting whisky, but a bunkhouse isn't any place to fight. Wait till morning. If you've still got it in your systems go outside and have it out. But you shouldn't disturb our game and break up the furniture. Be gentlemen, drunk or sober. Better shake hands and call it square."

"Aw, let 'em go to it, if they want to."

Charlie's voice, drink thickened, harsh, came from a corner of the room into which she could not see until she moved nearer. By the time she picked him out Fyfe resumed his seat at the table where three others and Benton waited with cards in their hands, red and white chips and money stacked before them.

She knew enough of cards to realize that a stiff poker game was on the board when she had watched one hand dealt and played. It angered her, not from any ethical motive, but because of her brother's part in it. He had no funds to pay a cook's wages, yet he could afford to lose on one hand as much as he credited her with for a month's work. She could slave at the kitchen job day in and day out to save him $45 a month. He could lose that without the flicker of an eyelash, but he couldn't pay her wages on demand. Also she saw that he had imbibed too freely, if the redness of his face and the glassy fixedness of his eyes could be read aright.

"Pig!" she muttered. "If that's his idea of pleasure. Oh, well, why should I care? I don't, so far as he's concerned, if I could just get away from this beast of a place myself."

Abreast of her a logger came to the broken window with a sack to bar out the frosty air. And Stella, realizing suddenly that she was shivering with the cold, ran back to the cabin and got into her bed.

But she did not sleep, save in uneasy periods of dozing, until midnight was long past. Then Fyfe and her brother came in, and by the sounds she gathered that Fyfe was putting Charlie to bed. She heard his deep, drawing voice urging the unwisdom of sleeping with calked boots on and Benton's hiccuppy response. The rest of the night she slept fitfully, morbidly imagining terrible things. She was afraid, that was the sum and substance of it. Over in the bunkhouse the carousel was still at its height. She could not rid herself of the sight of those two men struggling to be at each other like wild beasts, the bloody face of the one who had been struck, the coarse animalism of the whole whisky-saturated gang. It repelled and disgusted and frightened her.

The night frosts had crept through the single board walls of Stella's room and made its temperature akin to outdoors when the alarm awakened her at fore dawn. She experienced a physical shrinking from those grim solitudes in which there was nothing warm and human and kindly, nothing but vastness of space upon which silence lay like a smothering blanket, in which she, the human atom, was utterly negligible, a protesting mote in the inexorable wilderness.

A light burned in the kitchen. She thanked her stars that this bitter cold morning she would not have to build a fire with freezing fingers while her teeth chattered, and she hurried in to the warmth heralded by a spark belching stovepipe. But the Siwash girl had not risen to the occasion. Instead Jack Fyfe sat with his feet on the oven door, a cigar in one corner of his mouth. The kettle steamed. Her porridge pot bubbled ready for the meal.

"Good morning," he greeted. "Mind my pre-empting your job?"

"Not at all," she answered. "You can have it for keeps if you want."

"Aren't you getting pretty sick of this sort of work, these more or less uncomfortable surroundings and the sort of people you have to come in contact with?" he asked pointedly.

"I am," she returned as bluntly, "but I think that's rather an impertinent question, Mr. Fyfe."

"You hate it," he said positively. "I know you do. I've seen your feelings many a time. I don't blame you. It's a rotten business with a girl of your tastes and bringing up. And I'm afraid you'll find it worse if this snow stays long. I know what a logging camp is when work stops and whisky creeps in and the boss lets go his hold."

"That may be true," she returned gloomily, "but I don't see why you should enumerate these disagreeable things for my benefit."

"I'm going to show you a way out," he said softly. "I've been thinking it over for quite awhile. I want you to marry me."

Stella gasped.

"Mr. Fyfe?"

"Listen," he said peremptorily, leaning closer to her and lowering his voice. "I have an idea that you're going to say you don't love me. Lord, I know that. But you hate this. It grates against every inclination of yours like a file on steel. I wouldn't jar on you like that; wouldn't permit you to live in surroundings that would. That's the material side of it. Nobody can live on day dreams. I like you, Stella Benton, a whole lot more than I'd care to say right out loud. You and I together could make a home we'd be proud of. I want you, and you want to get away from this. It's natural. Marry me and play the game fair and I don't think you'll be sorry. I'm putting it as baldly as I can. You stand to win everything with nothing to lose but your domestic chains." The gleam of a smile lit up his features for a second. "Won't you take a chance?"

"No," she declared impulsively. "I won't be a party to any such cold blooded transaction."

"You don't seem to understand me," he said soberly. "I don't want to hand out any sentiment, but it makes me sore to see you wasting yourself on this sort of thing. If you must do it, why don't you do it for somebody who'll make it worth while? Because we don't marry with our heads in the fog is no reason we shouldn't get on fine. What are you going to do—stick here at this till you go crazy? You won't get away. You don't realize what a one idea, determined person this brother of yours is. He has just

I'm going to come back and ask you this same question every once in awhile so long as you're in reach and doing this dirty work for a thankless boss. You want to think of me as a possible refuge from a lot of disagreeable things. Take a gambling chance and marry me, Stella. Say yes, and say it now."

But she shook her head resolutely and as Katy John came in just then Fyfe took his foot off the stove and went out of the kitchen. He threw a glance over his shoulder at Stella, a broad smile, as if to say that he harbored no grudge and nursed no wound in his vanity because she would have none of him.

Katy rang the breakfast gong. Five minutes later the tattoo of knives and forks and spoons told of appetites in process of appeasement. Charlie came into the kitchen in the midst of this, bearing certain unmistakable signs. His eyes were inflamed, his cheeks still bearing the flush of liquor. His demeanor was that of a man suffering an intolerable headache and correspondingly short tempered. Stella barely spoke to him. It was bad enough for a man to make a beast of himself with whisky, but far worse was his gambling streak.

Stella watched him bathe his head copiously in cold water and then seat himself at the long table trying to force food upon an aggrieved and rebellious stomach. Gradually a flood of recklessness welled up in her breast.

"For two pins I would marry Jack Fyfe," she told herself savagely. "Anything would be better than this."

CHAPTER VII.

The Plunge.

STELLA went over that queer debate a good many times in the ten days that followed. It revealed Jack Fyfe to her in a new, inexplicable light, at odd variance with her former conception of the man. She could not have visualized him standing with one foot on the stove front speaking calmly of love and marriage if she had not seen him with her own eyes, heard him with somewhat incredulous ears. She had continued to endow him with the attributes of unrestrained passion, of headlong leaping to the goal of his desires, of brushing aside obstacles and opposition with sheer brute force, and he had shown unreckoned qualities of restraint, of understanding. She was not quite sure if this were guile or sensible consideration. He had put his case logically, persuasively even. She was very sure that if he had adopted emotional methods she would have been repelled. If he had laid siege to her hand and heart in the orthodox fashion she would have raised that siege in short order. As it stood, in spite of her words to him, there was in her own mind a lack of finality. As she went about her daily tasks that prospect of trying a fresh fling at the world as Jack Fyfe's wife tantalized her with certain desirable features.

Was it worth while to play the game as she must play it for some time to come, drudge away at mean, sordid work and amid the dreariest sort of environment? At best she could only get away from Charlie's camp and begin along new lines that might perhaps be little better, that must inevitably lie among strangers in a strange land. To what end? What did she that was wisest, for in spite of her Stella thought of him continually. It loomed always before her, a persistent compelling factor.

She knew at last, beyond any guessing, that the venture tempted, lured, perhaps because it contained so great an element of the unknown. To get away from this soul-dwelling room meant much. She felt herself reason desperately that the frying pan could not be worse than the fire and held at least the merit of greater dignity: freedom from the twin evils of poverty and thankless domestic slavery.

While she considered this, pro and con, shrinking from such a step, an hour, considering it soberly the next day, the days dragged past in wearisome sequence. The great depth of snow piled, was added to by spasmodic rains. The frosts held. The camp seethed with the restlessness of the men. In default of the daily work that consumed their superfluous energy the loggers argued and fought, drank and gambled, made "rough house" in their sleeping quarters till sometimes Stella's cheeks blanched and she expected murder to be done. Twice the Chickamin came aboard, from Roaring Springs with whisky and a protracted debauch ensued. Once a drunken logger shouldered his way into the kitchen to leer pleasantly at Stella and, himself flamed by liquor and the affront, Charlie Benton beat the man until his face was a mass of bloody bruises. That was only one of a dozen brutal incidents. All the routine discipline of the woods seemed to have slipped out

Jack Fyfe did not happen in again nearly two weeks and then only to a brief call, but he stole an opportunity, when Katy John was not looking to whisper in Stella's ear: "Have you been thinking about that galow of ours?"

He shook her head, and he went out without another word. He had pleaded for urged, and perhaps Benton's hands. When the second whisky consignment struck the camp Stella stayed in her room, refusing to cook until order reigned again. Benton grumblingly took up the burden himself. With Katy's help and that of sundry loggers he fed the roistering crew, but for his sister it was a two day period of protesting disgust.

That mood, like so many of her moods, relapsed into dogged endurance. She took up the work again when Charlie promised that no more whisky should be allowed in the camp.

"Though it's 10 to 1 I won't have a corporal's guard left when I want to start work again," he grumbled. "I'm well within my rights if I put my foot down hard on any jinks when there's work, but I have no license to set myself up as guardian of a logger's morals and pocketbook when I have nothing for him to do. These fellows are paying their board. So long as they don't make themselves obnoxious to you I don't see that it's our funeral whether they're drunk or sober. They'd tell me so quick enough."

To this pronouncement of expediency Stella made no rejoinder. She no longer expected anything much of Charlie in the way of consideration. So far as she could see, she, his sister, was little more to him than one of his loggers; a little less important than, say, his donkey engineer. In so far as she conducted to the well being of the camp and effected a saving to his credit in the matter of preparing food, he valued her and was willing to concede a minor point to satisfy her. Beyond that Stella felt that he did not go. Five years in totally different environments had dug a great gulf between them. He felt an arbitrary sense of duty toward her, she knew, but in its manifestations it never lapped over the bounds of his own immediate self interest.

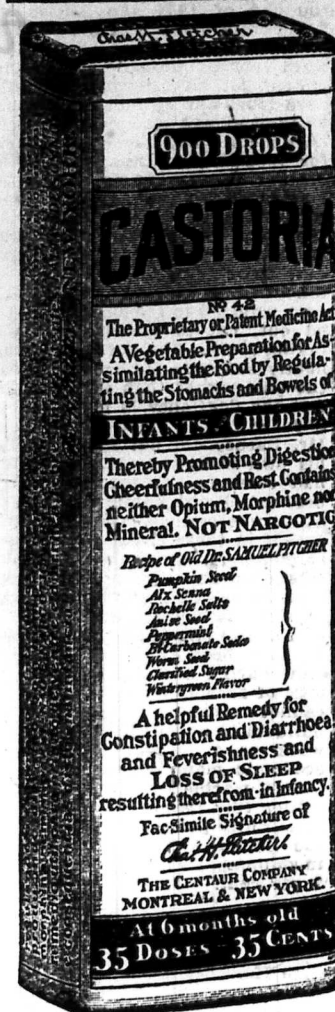

Stella looked out along the shores piled high with broken ice and snow, through a misty air to distant mountains that lifted themselves imperiously aloof, white spires against the sky—over a forest all draped in winter robes; shore, mountains and forest alike were chill and hushed and desolate. The lake spread its forty odd miles in a boomerang curve from Roaring Springs to Fort Douglas, a cold, lifeless gray. She sat a long time looking at that, and a dead weight seemed to settle upon her heart.

She did not hear Jack Fyfe come in. She did not dream he was there until she felt his hand gently on her shoulder and looked up. And so deep was her despondency, so keen the unassuaged craving for some human sympathy, some measure of understanding, that she made no effort to remove his hand. She was in too deep a spiritual quagmire to refuse any sort of aid, too deeply moved to indulge in analytical self fathoming. She had a dim sense of being oddly comforted by his presence, as if she, afloat on uncharted seas, saw suddenly near at hand a safe anchorage and welcoming hands. Afterward she recalled that. As it was, she looked up at Fyfe and hid her tear stained face in her hands. He stood silent a few seconds. When he did speak there was a peculiar hesitation in his voice.

"What is it?" he said softly. "What's the trouble now?"

Briefly she told him, the barriers of her habitual reserve swept aside before the essentially human need to share a burden that has grown too great to bear alone.

"Oh, thunder!" Fyfe grunted when her hands imprisoned tight between his two big palms. Then, before she was quite aware of his intention, he kissed her gently on the mouth and was gone.

This turn of events left Benton dumfounded, to use a trite but expressive phrase. He came in, apparently to look at Stella in amazed curiosity, for at first he had nothing to say. He sat down beside his makeshift desk and pawed over some papers, running the fingers of one hand through his thick brown hair.

"Well, sis," he blurted out at last, "I suppose you know what you're doing?" "I think so," Stell returned composedly.

"But why all this mad haste?" he asked. "If you're going to get married why didn't you let me know so I could give you some sort of decent send off?"

"Oh, thanks!" she returned dryly. "I don't think that's necessary. Not at this stage of the game, as you occasionally remark."

He ruminated upon this a minute, flushing slightly.

"Well, I wish you luck," he said sincerely enough, "though I can hardly realize this sudden move. You and Jack Fyfe may get on all right. He's a good sort—in his way."

"His way suits me," she said, spurred to the defensive by what she deemed was wisest, for in spite of herself she thought of him continually. He had always before her, a persistent, compelling factor.

She knew at last, beyond any gaining, that the venture tempted, large perhaps because it contained so great an element of the unknown. To get away from this soul dwarfing roundabout much. She felt herself reasoning erratically that the frying pan could be worse than the fire and held at it the merit of greater dignity and freedom from the twin evils of poverty, thankless domestic slavery.

While she considered this, she was shrinking from such a step even; considering it soberly the next days dragged past in wearisome sequence. The great depth of snow ended, was added to by spasmodic flurries. The frosts held. The camp seethed with the restlessness of the men. In the midst of the daily work that consumed their superfluous energy the loggers used and fought, drank and gambled, the "rough house" in their sleeping quarters till sometimes Stella's cheeks flushed and she expected murder to be done. Twice the Chickamin came back on Roaring Springs with whisky and a protracted debauch ended. That was only one of a dozen brutal incidents. All the routine discipline of the camp seemed to have slipped out of

"Oh, thunder!" Fyfe grunted when she had finished. "This isn't any place for you at all."

He slid his arm across her shoulders and tilted her face with his other hand so that her eyes met his. And she felt no desire to draw away or any of that old instinct to be on her guard against him.

"Will you marry me, Stella?" he asked evenly. "I can free you from this sort of thing forever."

"How can I?" she returned. "I don't want to marry anybody. I don't love you. I'm not even sure I like you. I'm too miserable to think, even. I'm afraid to take a step like that. I should think you would be too."

He shook his head.

"I've thought a lot about it lately," he said. "It hasn't occurred to me to be afraid of how it may turn out. Why borrow trouble when there's plenty at hand? I don't care whether you love me or not, right now. You couldn't possibly be any worse off as my wife, could you?"

"No," she admitted. "I don't see how I could."

"Take a chance then," he urged. "I'll make a fair bargain with you. I'll make life as pleasant for you as I can. You'll live pretty much as you've been brought up to live, so far as money goes. The rest we'll have to work out for ourselves. I won't ask you to pretend anything you don't feel. You'll play fair because that's the way you're made—unless I've sized you up wrong. It'll simply be a case of our adjusting ourselves, just as mating couples have been doing since the year one. You've everything to gain and nothing to lose."

"In some ways," she murmured.

"Every way," he insisted. "You are not handicapped by caring for any other man."

"How do you know?" she asked.

"Just a hunch," Fyfe smiled. "If you did he'd have beaten me to the rescue long ago—if he were the sort of man you could care for."

"No," she admitted, "there isn't any other man, but there might be. Think how terrible it would be if it happened—afterward."

Fyfe shrugged his shoulders.

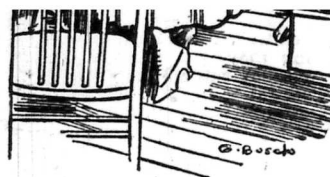

"Sufficient unto the day," he said. "There is no string on either of us just now. We start even. That's good enough. Will you?"

"You have me at a disadvantage," she whispered. "You offer me a lot that I want, everything but a feeling I've somehow always believed ought to exist, ought to be mutual. Part of me wants to shut my eyes and jump. Part of me wants to hang back. I can't stand this thing I've got into and see no way of getting out of. Yet I dread starting a new train of wretchedness. I'm afraid—whichever way I turn."

Fyfe considered this a moment.

"Well," he said finally, "that's a rather unfortunate attitude. But I'm going into it with my eyes open. I know what I want. You'll be making a sort of experiment. Still, I advise you to make it. I think you'll be the better for making it. Come on. Say yes."

Before She Was Quite Aware of His Intention He Kissed Her.

Stella looked up at him, then out over the banked snow, and all the dreary discomforts, the mean drudgery, the sordid shifts she had been put to for months rose up in disheartening phalanx. For that moment Jack Fyfe loomed like a tower of refuge. She trusted him now. She had a feeling that even if she grew to dislike him she would still trust him. He would play fair. If he said he would do this or that she could bank on it absolutely.

She turned and looked at him searchingly a long half minute, wondering what really lay behind the blue eyes that met her own so steadfastly. He stood waiting patiently, outwardly impassive. But she could feel through the thin stuff of her dress a quiver in the fingers that rested on her shoulder and that repressed sign of the man's pentup feeling gave her an odd thrill, moved her strangely, swung the pendulum of her impulse.

"Yes," she said.

Fyfe bent a little lower.

"Listen," he said in characteristically blunt fashion. "You want to get away from here. There is no sense in our fussing or hesitating about what we're going to do, is there?"

"No, I suppose not," she agreed.

"I'll send the Panther down to the Springs for Lefty Howe's wife," he outlined his plans unhesitatingly. "She will get up here this evening. Tomorrow we will go down and take the train to Vancouver and be married. You have plenty of good clothes, good enough for Vancouver. I know"—with a whimsical smile—"because you had when you came last summer, and you've had no chance to wear them out. Then we'll go somewhere—California, Florida, and come back to Roaring Lake in the spring. You'll have all the bad taste of this out of your mouth by that time."

Stella nodded acquiescence. Better to make the plunge boldly, since she had elected to make it.

"All right. I'm going to tell Benton," Fyfe said. "Goodbye till tomorrow."

She stood up. He looked at her a long time earnestly, searchingly, one of this stage of the game, as you occasionally remark."

He ruminated upon this a minute, flushing slightly.

"Well, I wish you luck," he said sincerely enough, "though I can hardly realize this sudden move. You and Jack Fyfe may get on all right. He's a good sort—in his way."

"His way suits me," she said, spurred to the defensive by what she deemed a note of disparagement in his utterance. "If you have any objections or criticisms you can save your breath—or address them direct to Mr. Fyfe."

"No, thank you," he grinned. "I don't care to get into any argument with him especially as he's going to be my brother-in-law. Fyfe's all right. I didn't imagine he was the sort of man you'd fancy, that's all."

Stella refrained from any comment on this. She had no intention of admitting to Charlie that marriage with Jack Fyfe commended itself to her chiefly as an avenue of escape from a well nigh intolerable condition which he himself had inflicted upon her. Her pride rose in arms against any such belittling admission. She admitted it frankly to herself and to Fyfe, because Fyfe understood and was content with that understanding. She desired to forget that phase of the transaction. She told herself that she meant honestly to make the best of it.

SOME SOBER GOWNS

Sensible and Economical Fabrics
Not Disregarded.

Black Satin, Blue Serge, Gray Jersey
Cloth and Shades of Gaberdine Ruling Street Costumery.

There is no disposition shown by the French designers, as they have expressed their genius in the new clothes, to omit all the fabrics that are sensible and economical. Black satin, blue serge, gray jersey cloth and several shades of gaberdine are ruling street costumery.

Metal tissues and laces are lavishly used for the afternoon and the evening, but they are sobered by miles of chiffon. Sturdy crepe de chine, which looks fragile and is not, is offered in the smartest gowns for the street.

There are one-piece frocks as well as suits, and capes have superseded top coats. Elaborate and expensive embroidery has given way to ornamentation by means of wool or twine, and intricate machine stitching is abandoned in favor of bits of applied material, straight rows of military braid or folds of corded satin.

Lace is used as though Belgium had been reinstated and every one of the lace weavers working overtime. Flounces, capes, sleeves and panels of lace are dropped on narrow, slim underslips of satin.

Satin and serge are combined for those who want to wear a frock for the next six months without feeling uncomfortably warm or cold.

Waistcoats, the styles of which were drawn from all the epochs preceding this one, are used in coats, which gives the economical woman a chance to refurbish her last year's suit and feel herself quite in the picture. The French designers knew that they were offering a sop to the economists in promoting this accessory.

Sturdy pique has been revived for those who do not care to invest in handkerchief linen, perishable batiste or expensive flowered voile. These suits and frocks of pique are trimmed with velvet, as in older days, and all the dyes that France has manufactured for her own use have been brought to bear upon white and cream lace in order to make harmonious costumes; and this trick again gives the woman of slender means a chance to look exceedingly smart through the medium of dipping yellow lace in a small quantity of reliable dye.

Paris has sent over a multiple number of short, straight jackets, with fronts that do not meet, and in the space between is displayed a frilled front with a turnover collar and a dotted foulard cravat. This little front is basted into the coat, and thereby saves one from using a whole shirt-waist, with its accompanying laundry bill.

USE GOOD TASTE IN STYLES

Sensible Fabrics Have the Call and Fashion Responds to Needs of World War Era.

In these days when women are placing their wardrobes upon a war basis, materials, like all other things, must be considered from the standpoint of economy, declares a writer in Vogue. There are wise and unwise economies, and today, when textiles are being produced under the most difficult conditions, and when it is impossible to make fine fabrics at small expense, it is almost invariably wiser to invest in thoroughly trustworthy stuffs.
A suit which will not survive a shower and a dress which loses its shape and freshness after a few wearings are poor investments. To obtain materials, therefore, which are worth being made up (and the matter of making up also is more costly than in the past) a woman must reconcile herself to a greater expenditure. Let her curtail the number of her gowns, if necessary, but not the quality.

Fashions this season are exceedingly kind to the woman who is striving to dress sensibly. For instance, the vogue of foulard, now definitely established, is distinctly in accord with the principle of dressing sensibly. A foulard frock is one of the best wearing garments which a woman can include in her wardrobe. Not too formal for morning and quite formal enough for afternoon wear, it may be worn during many hours of the day. If need be, wartime informality will even allow it to appear in the evening.

Some of the new foulards are exceedingly charming; they are attractive in design and exquisite in quality, and nothing drapes more beautifully than this silk. There are two types of the material, one of them dull of surface and the other printed on a satin ground.

Next in importance to the foulards are the new printed chiffons. The designs are similar to the foulard patterns, though with a chiffon it is always possible to adopt a larger and bolder pattern than that which would be employed for a more substantial stuff, as its delicacy lends an illusively attractive vagueness to the design.

The Militia Department reminds all officers of the permanent force who are qualified for service in Class One under the Military Service Act, that they must report for duty at once, and be prepared to revert to the ranks. An order in Council to this effect was passed some time ago, but it has been neglected to a considerable extent. The order also states that the regulation applies to officers who have been employed in the C.E. F., but whose services are not considered to be satisfactory or complete.

Decision in such matters is to be left to Headquarters. It is said that the necessary steps will be taken to enforce this order, which comes into force immediately.

are one of the clearest signs of the prosperity prevailing in any agricultural district.

Good Judgment and Forethought Used

Travellers show preference for Scenic Route; Busy Men
use Night Trains

Nowadays, forethought, and a lively sense of public appreciation play an important part in the construction of a railroad. The Canadian Northern made a happy choice in the selection of its route between Toronto and Ottawa: skirting the shoreline of Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte; over the height of land between Napanee and Sydenham; and through Rideau Lakes region, adds zest to the daytime journey in Spring or Summer. Comfortable day and night trains, stopping at principal intermediate stations, have made the route very popular.

The Red Cross Society

Those who did not hear Miss Ada
Ward in the Armouries last week missed one of the best entertainments given for the Red Cross during the war. Miss Ward is a cartoonist and entertainer, with considerable dramatic ability and a keen sense of humor. The magnetism of the little woman held the audience spell-bound during the entire evening, as she told of her experiences among the base soldiers of France. Should Miss Ward ever visit Napanee again, a warm welcome will be given her. The Red Cross realized from the entertainment $29.95.

The numbers sold on the handsome yoke, kindly donated by Mrs. Frink, realized a good sum. Mrs. Hartley Lapum held the lucky number.

The Women's Institute, Adolphustown, has sent in 21 pairs of socks and 10 sets of pyjamas; also a donation of $10.00. The kindness is greatly appreciated.

The Mayor has kindly given the Society permission to have Queen
Alexander Rose Day on July 1st, should there be a Demonstration here
on that day.

The usual work-meeting will be held on Saturday. All are welcome.

Surprised.

A well-known Hampshire squire, noted for his shabby coats, was one day leaning over a gate which com- manded a good view of his broad acres.

A well pleased smile was on his lips when he was startled by the sound of a wheedling voice near him.

"Gie us a hand, old chap, to help my poor old donkey up the hill."

The squire turned and, with the smile deepening on his face, pushed the little cart behind with so hearty a good-will that the coster exclaimed with admiration:

"Well, I'm darned if you ain't a good old sort. I say," he went on in a whisper. "I've knocked over two or three of the old squire's rabbits, and I'm darned if you shan't have one." Whereupon, with a great ap- pearance of secrecy, he pulled out a fat young rabbit from under a sack in the cart, and trotted away, leaving the bewildered squire with one of his own rabbits dangling from his hands.

A Preparedness Course.

They were questioning the subur- banite home from the trenches. "And weren't you terrified that night among the barbed wire entangle- ments?"

"No," he replied. "I have come home late when the wife has left the croquet set out on the lawn."

Dainty Milly Murton will be played in a dainty way by charming Miss Woodcock in "The Doctor's Private Secretary."

When Miss Helen Grange was in town a short time since on a visit from Ottawa, she very kindly handed the Treasurer of the local Belgian Relief Committee, a donation which is much appreciated and for which the said Committee desire to express their thanks to Miss Grange, as well as to all throughout the town and County, who are constantly contrib- uting to the Belgian Committee, and to the collectors who are, and have been, working so faithfully in its interests. All our members and friends both in town and country cannot fail to know of the forth-com- ing entertainment which the "U. E. Loyalist" Chapter and Committee are presenting next week in the Armour- ies on the 12th and 13th June, as ad- ditional bills and posters are calling attention to this fact. We would counsel everyone to see this produc- tion, which cannot fail to please un- der Mr. Bird's able direction. No pains are being spared to make this a finished performance. Do not allow anything to prevent your being pre- sent on one or both evenings—the object being so worthy, as our share of the proceeds will go to our sol- diers and sailors.
